This was, according to his statement, that he would let Oxford have $10,000 if Oxford would induce his daughter Lillie to marry Burbank. Oxford was indignant, but turning the matter over in his mind, he spoke of it to his daughter, and to his amazement she was satisfied to marry Burbank.

So Oxford went back to Burbank and the marriage was arranged.

They were married on Monday last in a Brooklyn church. The ceremony was a quest one.

On Tuesday Oxford called at Burbank's house and received the $10,000.

Last night's fraces, however, had nothing to do with the diamond. It all arose, according to Mannings story in court, because Briggs had snapped back a saucy reply to Manning when the latter asked Briggs where he was going.

He said a friend of Briggs's grabbed his bat and Briggs struck him with a cane over the head, cutting three or four bad gashes.

Briggs swore that Manning had called him a vile name and jabbed him with his umbrella and that he only defended himself.

Judge McMahon said: "I'll take a complaint against Manning for assaulting Briggs, and put these cases down for trial June 29 at 2 o'clock.
